

Statement against modern slavery and human trafficking

Avnet, Inc. together with its subsidiaries (“Avnet”) is one of the world’s largest distributors of electronic components and embedded technology, serving customers across the globe. Our supply chain includes providers of electronic components and solutions as well as software and related services.

Avnet is committed to conducting business ethically and upholding basic human rights in all its operations. This includes taking steps to ensure that there is no modern slavery or human trafficking in its supply chain and in its own business.

Core Values

Avnet’s Core Values include Integrity, which requires all employees to demonstrate honesty, respect for others and trustworthiness in all we do, and to demonstrate ethical behavior in all of our interactions with customers, suppliers and colleagues. We accept ownership, and accept the consequences of our decisions.

Codes of Conduct

Avnet’s Code of Conduct contains not only an obligation to comply with all laws applicable in the geographies in which we do business, but also an obligation to uphold basic human rights in all of our operations, including zero tolerance of the use of forced labor and human trafficking. In addition, Avnet subscribes to the Partner Code of Conduct of the Global Technology Distribution Council, which affirms the importance of adhering to the highest standards of legal and ethical conduct in the technology distribution channel around the world.

Global Policy against Human Trafficking, Modern Slavery and Child Labor

Avnet implemented in 2016 and follows a Global Policy against Human Trafficking, Modern Slavery and Child Labor.

Work Environment

Our company provides reasonable working hours and fair wages to those who perform work on our behalf. We do not use or tolerate others’ use of forced labor or human trafficking practices, including the exploitation of children. Unlawful child labor violates the integrity of our business, and is not condoned by Avnet. We will never knowingly do business with customers, suppliers, and other business partners who violate these policies.

Supply Chain

Avnet’s standard supplier contracts contain Compliance with Laws provisions which oblige the parties to comply with all laws applicable to their activities under the contract. Avnet’s Global Supplier Quality Handbook obliges suppliers to comply with international ethical standards, which includes producing their goods lawfully, without exploiting the people who made them and in decent working conditions.

Our major suppliers are members of the Electronic Industry Citizenship Coalition (“EICC”) and/or have adopted the EICC Code of Conduct, which prohibits forced, bonded or indentured labor, involuntary prison labor, slavery or trafficking of persons, and requires minimum standards in terms of working conditions. Avnet supports the EICC Code of Conduct and is actively pursuing conformance to the EICC Code of Conduct and its standards.

Training

Avnet provides Ethics and Compliance Training to its employees upon joining the company and at regular intervals afterwards. We also provide specific training on fair labor practices and recruitment to targeted employees.

Statement against modern slavery and human trafficking

Reporting and Enforcement

Avnet encourages its employees to report all unethical behavior through the Code of Conduct, in its Ethics and Compliance training and through Speak Up! posters at Avnet facilities around the world. Where permitted by local law, Avnet provides facilities which enable anonymous reporting. Reports are investigated and appropriate action is taken within a reasonable period. Employees are protected from retaliation for making a report in good faith, and anyone found to have acted against this protection is subject to disciplinary action up to and including termination.

William J. Amelio
Chief Executive Officer, Director
Avnet